there had been a fight.
"I have a hazy recollection of some of argument," he said, "but I do not recall hitting him."
"What do you remember?" asked the separated the two men. Senft's questions indicated also that it may be shown that the reason Farrell's arms were extended in the attitude of a man who had just delivered a blow was that he was trying to protect Hinton from another assault.

One of the questions asked by the court of inquiry of Lieut. Kloor was why he had not made an official report of the fight between Hinton and Farrell and the conduct of the two men, who were under his command. Kloor replied that he had himself received no official report of the fight. He admitted that Hinton had told him of it. and that he had straightened the matter out, but he said he did not consider Hinton's statement as being official.

"This," he said, "was mainly because it was made in a casual manner in reply to a question I put to him to the effect, 'What's on your mind; you seem to be a little disturbed?"

The inquiry will be resumed to-morrow, and indications are that the court will continue its efforts to go deeply in othe conduct of the three men during the expedition. Before the inquiry endes several witnesses, among them telegraph operators and others who came in contact with the three men will be summoned from Canada to testify.

Slayer Confesses Hiding Corpse in Relative's Home.

EANGOR, Mc., Feb. 17.—Nelson Eugene Knights of Dexter confessed to-night that he had killed Alfred Coreou. 60 years old, and that he had taken the body in a trunk to the house of his mother-in-law, in Canaan, where it was Neighbors of Dayis said last night that sears old, and that he had taken the body in a trunk to the house of his mother-in-law, in Canaan, where it was hidden in a barn, according to Sheriff Fernandez of Penobscot county.

While the authorities were listening to Knights's alleged confession word came from Sheriff Moores of Somerset county that Corson's body had been found in the barn. It was wrapped in quilts that evidently had been taken from Corson's bed, the Sheriff said.

Corson had been missing from his home in Dexter for three weeks when last Monday indications of a crime were found by Joseph Ganeau, owner of the building, who was searching for a leak in a water pipe.

Knights was held here by the authorities on a larceny charge after they had found in his possession a horse that vas alleged to have belonged to Corson. Discovery of a trunk yesterday in the home of Mrs. Evangeline Welch, Knights's mother-in-law, led the police to question Knights further, and the sileged confession came.
